Thanks so much for your quick response, Michael.

This is as we have expected - or at least we suspect that the accounts that have declined significantly have changed to the 30mg. This might - again I say might - indicate that some doctors are questionable in terms of writing what the "pain" patients demand.

I really appreciate and cherish our relationship.

Best regards,

Jack

Jack,
Both of my Philadelphia accounts have switched from Oxycontin 80mg to Oxycodone IR 30 mg. Both are still serviced by McKesson and possibly other wholesalers. I continue to watch them daily because of their volumes.

Both of these Pharmacies have switched to the IR and I graphed it. Not sure it means anything other than the switch. Pharmacies where I had high quantity Oxycontin 80's I now have high quantity Oxycodone 30's. I have been told by the Pharmacists that patients in place of three 80mg a day for 240mg they are now taking eight 30mg for 240 total mg's. The total pill count has thus risen two and a half times.

Hello Michael:

Here we go again. ☺

I hope you are enjoying the summer.

Here are some accounts that I have just one or two questions. I am including Bill, because I have forgotten who covers Nashville - sorry.

The reason these accounts are up for discussion is simply because they have declined significantly in terms of purchases of the new formulation of OxyContin versus last year. They were never on the radar before - but only now for the reason that they have decreased dramatically percentage-wise. I'm cleaning up our "old system".

Would you kindly let me know if these three accounts are still being serviced by McKesson - and that they are in good standing?

Have they changed to oxycodone IR 30mg?

Which reminds me - I'd like to discuss whether or not there would be any added value if I could somehow see the total oxycodone sales - not just OxyContin - for specific accounts when we have discussions in the future. No pressure, and I value your opinion.
